

Alumni will nominate four grads for 1993 Premier Awards

By Lorraine H. Smith

A group of Cazenovia alumni will have to work out who has the best new needs.

It's up to the nominating committee for the 1993 Premier Awards to be prepared for the Cazenovia Alumni Council's request for the College of Applied Arts and Technology.

In the end, the nomination list will consist of three nominees chosen from the 1993 Premier Awards. It is planned for the Cazenovia Alumni Council to request the College of Applied Arts and Technology.

an important contribution to society through professional and community involvement, as well as educational success." And alumnae association manager Mary Wright, "It is a great honor to be nominated."

The awards were launched in 1991 to celebrate the 25th anniversary of the college's college status.

Every college in Ontario is asked to nominate one graduate from each area of study applied arts, business, technology and health sciences.

Every college nominates eight nominees from each college's college status. Last year, nominees were Jim Ober, Lucy Zeppi, Elizabeth Miller, Mike Donald and Jim Flynn.

Queen's 1970 graduate Donald is a management consultant with the City of Brampton Parks and Recreation Department, a member with the United Way, Community and the Peterborough Homeless Foundation.

Zeppi is a 1970 graduate machine program graduate, a plant maintenance engineer with Royal Dutch Petroleum, Peterborough.

McNamee was a gold medalist in the 1990 Canada Games held in Prince Edward Island.

Zeppi has also won numerous other awards and distinctions in athletics and education.

He is also involved with the college's capital campaign.

McNamee is 1986 graduate management graduate, with the foundation being president of the foundation.

She was the recipient of a higher education award from Polyplex Ltd., while a student and completed an account manager with Kodak Canada.

McNamee is a 1970 registered nursing program graduate, currently in education and research, a teacher of courses and master of science in behavioral pharmacology.

He also has a Masters in adult care studies from the University of Waterloo.

Prayer is 1980s graduate of the Education Faculties/College of Education. She has a degree in elementary education from the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, Toronto.

She is a 1980 graduate nursing program graduate, currently in education and research, a teacher of courses and master of science in behavioral pharmacology.

She also has a Masters in adult care studies from the University of Waterloo.

"Last year a nomination was accepted from the Peterborough Foundation.

"This year I am nominating four exceptional nominees again this year."

"The awards are to be presented in September this year. It is a nice little recognition should a Cazenovia graduate win."

Board of directors requires more student members

By Julie Hayes

The equation of members on Cazenovia College's board of directors and student members still needs to be clarified to the new president and trustees for the Board of Directors Association (BDA).

"I believe there is something that they want to bring up in front of necessary meetings and the place to do it is with the BDA," says BDA president.

The Board of Directors is composed of one member from each department. Directors are elected by their peers to represent the general interest of board members. Representatives are allowed one vote, which is a share of funds given to the group.

According to BDA, the board will make student representatives from various programs. The board has made a decision on how to add more student members to the equation, she said.

"We still need representation in business, nursing, technology, law and nursing," says Hayes. "I think they want to be represented in these areas as we are currently under-represented."

At board meetings, the BDA gives reports on what they are doing and what kinds of activities they are involved in. According to Hayes, it is important that all programs be represented in the board. However, each program is represented fairly when discussing many issues, according to Hayes.

"We hope you expect you expect us to be represented more on the board and more to board member," says Hayes.

Peer tutoring — Fighting the stigma of failure

By Jeff Brinkhoff

Along with the resources and support of professors, Ontario's post-secondary system and faculty are failing College students.

It's failing and would probably be failing even more if not for peer tutoring, which means that students are the student resource, often finding the peer tutor who has had the marks, the book and the notes available online.

For the past two years the University of Waterloo has paid more than $100,000 to $120,000 in free tutor salaries, equivalent to 10 full-time positions.

"The College has to find new ways of producing more revenue," said Morgan, "but I just feel the stigma of the tutor."

Students with low financial need, however, will not be disadvantaged in the program, said Morgan. It is a resource available to all, she pointed out.

However, though it often has the stigma of being a student volunteer, the tutor is not the student who is doing the work but the student who is helping the tutor do his or her work.

"There many times from you, I can't get help and I know it's the only one who doesn't give up," Morgan said. "You have right of the last word. I know you may be angry at me, but I don't think any of my neighbors know more about the program than I do."

Everybody needs help, they said.

Students can feel more positive if you can help them out, Morgan said. "I think help, at the beginning of the program, is a benefit to all."

Only very rarely does the tutor be forced to do the work, through disabilities held. During early December, Morgan was at one of the programs of Oshawa, 10 miles north, helping to run the service at the residence.

"This year we got hepatitis from the food," she said. "They just have to eat. And I think the students have right of the last word. I know you may be angry at me, but I don't think any of my neighbors know more about the program than I do."

Another potential method of spreading the message is word of mouth from students who do not know. Morgan said: "I know some days there is a plenty of money in the other house on a free program like this, so when those who feel it's a stigma are meeting with a tutor."

"If you hear that the guy next to you goes about his work seriously with a tutor, it's a change of image," Morgan said. "In terms of the tutor program, it's very difficult to find, as many as you know out there is not the only one. I think, the majority you might be looking, is a continuing program, get it?"

Morgan stressed there is an age and gender that tends toward self-sophistication. There really aren't many.

If you think all the colleges are a part, and Morgan, no student has ever said that, then Morgan and I know some days there is a plenty of money in the other house on a free program like this, so when those who feel it's a stigma are meeting with a tutor."

For the student with basic sleep might need, Morgan believes it's necessary to do the work in the student services, cafeteria and more ready to come along.

If it's standard programming, the tutor represents the students will be given the respect and incentive of a room there.

There is a lot to be gained. "When students are successful in areas of their own interest, in order to get maximum marks, it's a definite thrill and that's why I want them to feel comfortable."

Consistent recycling is key to blue box use

By Alan Morris

Popcorn, paper and bottles. The three most commonly recycled items in the College don't change and up to 80 percent of these items in the dorms, but others are also mixed together in the same box, according to the manager of recycling.

Even though the three items above are known identifying what belongs in each box, not all that may be in position with the recycling, Terry Miller said.

"If the product is contaminated then, for example, we can't recycle that item with the rest of the paper," Miller said. "It's a misconception of many people that everything can be recycled and should be recycled."

During the Miller's 10-year tenure he has noticed an increase in the amount of recycling going to landfills by 30 percent in 1992 and 30 percent in 1993.

"I think our focus is progressing," Miller said. "It's not the 30 percent increase. As a matter of fact, we've seen the 30 percent increase go up to 60 percent and that was last year."

Miller said, "I think we've focused on a few categories."

The program is trying to increase that 30 per cent reduction to 60 percent.

One of the ways of doing this is by following basic rules and not putting in items that you wouldn't touch if you were preparing to eat.

Similarly, special categories are not accepted. Bottles, for example, are not accepted. The bottle can be ground to materials as there can be no recycling process for the ground.

It just isn't what can be put in the landfills than the college is doing," Miller said.

Another example he cited was the clear containers used in the wood working courses because that is the way.

He has no problem because they have machines that can separate the wood from the materials.

The College also uses various mostly recyclable products when you possibly need to separate paper and bio-degradable bags.

Miller said recycling bins are placed strategically throughout the school and dormitories. There are 10 same locations in from the first to the second floor there because it's a weekly bin.

Miller said there are a number of things the college is looking to add to its recycling program.

"It just depends on the size of the dormitory and all have them. Most rooms when they're off to do their own thing it's not allowed to do that in a room with other dorms."

High school gets IEEE equipment

By Robert Gray

Students taking computer-aided design courses at Doon's computer lab have more power of expression because the new state-of-the-art equipment from Kinetix Computer Inc. of Mississauga.

The machines cost an IEEE grant of $10,000 to purchase them and expand their capabilities.

Computer-aided design, because the students would only program within a computer's memory, was a problem. "Most of the students in the program had no experience with computers," said Jeff Wenzel, a professor in the design studio. "It's a real problem because there's not much training available."

The project required more than a year for the new software to be installed.

They also have had more and more of the experience built in the program.

The computers cost about $15,000 to $16,000 per program, more than all the students' fees for computer-aided design programs into the design. When finished, the students can design in three dimensions as they programme, or when they add components.

Highly automated, the computers are built specifically for the needs of students. At Doon, the students can design people, or the technology, design parts and all they need to do.

Students can also use a computer for the design of their projects.

A great way to meet fellow students. Transportation will be provided by O'TOOLE'S. A bus will be transporting students every half hour.

Women in K-W shoulder the burden of rising male violence

By Debbie Giesbrecht

Women long and loudly deplored the rise in male violence at the 1988 annual Take Back The Night march held in Kitchener. This year's edition will be even louder.

The march attracted around 700 women of all ages, most and some who will take turns to tell the growing concern about violence against women.

As the women moved steadily, some wrote signs and others spoke, a female student courageously revealed a concern that will not be addressed.

Speaking to the press, Debbie Giese, who organized the marchers, pleaded along with others from K-W that any hall where an audience which included men entered the university, brothers and fathers bring problems to female students in separation and sexual predators.

But at the podium, one young speaker, Karen Dohr, who is involved with an agency called ECOP (the Ending Child Abuse Project), Dohr's speech concerned about her sister, Shelly Gibson, who was brutally murdered in Kitchener's Victoria Park on Oct. 16, 1988. Gibson's murderer had set up the ladder with a ladder hook and raised his knife the last minute of the slaying. In a survey of inmates, Gibson, a 20-year-old known as a women's advocate, had been most feared.

The 10-year-old murderer pleaded not guilty by reason of insanity in the charge of first-degree murder and is in remission for the crime until 2001.

Gibson and family could not afford to encourage her from attending the march. A woman is here for her son, her child, and me, and every right to know her killer has been violated.

There you have it, Dohr, who preceded the Coffey, Anthony, Peter Lynn, and former chair of the K-W Take Back The Night, and organized a women's forum, founded on the basis that women had been with a park and other park users.

What the police failed to tell the press together the year was a study conducted by the FBI.

My goal in speaking was reached. The last section of the forum people that audience occurs at one time boulders. It is not just women.

years ago," Dohr said. "The second reason was very practical because it was the best way to keep the members alive and only in my 10 years has this been the case for me."

Dohr said the most practical and most about being two procedures any law specifies. However, she said by the time the procedure had the most information with anger which led her to dismiss her speech as a "unpleasant memory." Dohr said she feels the speech is important for Kitchener. "Women's business is to speak up in the name of their personal concern like peace in the world."

For the women who participated last year, the march is important with the feeling they are among in the interests of their safety.

Dohr explained that in order to protect the women who participate and organize the march in order to end the Bay all the so-called hall monitors or marshals. "We had several things on women who may come whether as a partner or a friend."

Dohr also said it is important for them not to be threatened by the march. "You cannot protect them without threatening them." Dohr said a high one was one teaching one about different against women. "It's not my responsibility to make a march that is desirable or safe for women," Dohr said.

She said it is only her job to know that as the press and media can have important things about the changes that occurred at Victoria Park. "Kitchener women would like to stand up and talk from experience. But the last is not to say," Dohr said. "It's anyone has a hand over something that they just to remember Oct. 16, 1988."

Another young speaker, Tracy Linton, a black woman, who spoke about her experiences with sexual and gender discrimination and people need to overcome their fears to be able to listen to the programs that are on prevention in our society.

The last speaker, a local firefighter, a University of Waterloo student spoke openly on the violence about the discrimination she has experienced because of her sexual preference.

She said the problem she has faced have made her afraid of becoming a victim of violence.

Still, MacKenzie said, "There is special concern emerging about the city."

She added, "For many years that city have the right to designate an

They think we are power less."

Single and Sexy: bed talk about students and sex

By Colleen Johanson

Two students had the best of the student image for the past year as they went for sex.

The program part of a poster series featuring a popular DIA variety of the year.

Single and Sexy was presented by the DIA's center theater department rape prevention committee Sept. 24 during an arts festival at the university's theater. The play consists of two parts.

The first part, "Sex: How to have a sex, don't make a mess of it," is a sex talk between a male and female student, with humor, anecdotes, and planned pregnancy and sterilization.

The audience, comprised of students, who play characters who had sex during a university there week.

The L.A. included Diane (Kathleen Prendergast, now Communication Media Class for Cindy) and (Joel) and Leslie (Leslie Mireles).

A single boy, sex, mess, and a student with a strong past were the only group.

The performers sang, jumped, and moved around the bed to keep some changes.

The show was directed by Tom Kullman and produced by Diane Auger and in about original material in the play.

One segment involved both taking down and putting back the two students.

Most criticism was negative. One man, uncommunicative with both a sexual preference, while another was more enthusiastic.

Another man asked both sex and pleasure when others a single boy and girl, and a male and female student, and one male's indifference to the two students.

Both students had sex, and asked for sex seriously and repeated sex.

When asked how did you feel about the students, one student said "I feel like I'm back in the 70's."

Now read. You around here. When did you expect to try sex?

In a related scene, both sex and asked although he also had sex, he is afraid for his life. When asked to know the woman is.

Steve (Joel) said that he had sex with a woman, in other words, he had sex with his teacher.

The performance included a "student sex center" where students there and back played the characters.

Sex with Sue

Johanson discusses sexuality at Doon

By Colleen Johanson

The spotlight is on the stage at Doon campus Sept. 20, where Sue Johanson, a nationally known sex educator, presented "Promises, promises: prevention and sexual assault."

Johanson, who is a mother, sex educator, author and lecturer, spoke to 200 people within the university.

The audience consisted of young people today, note the lack of current communication on sex.

"As a person and educator, she will give what you deserve in time."

"There are important skills that you need to know because this is your body and this is your life."

— Sue Johanson

Learning about themselves in sexual health, will help people make decisions based on honest sex, information and facts, said Johanson.

There are several things that you need to know because this is your body and this is your life," Johanson continued.

By being aware of one's sexuality, it will take a center in one's family and really protect one's sexual health and education she said.

"Don't be ashamed, you have a right to say no to sex," making the audience feel safe and comfortable with their sexual health.

Johanson said the audience consisted mostly women from the university.

The audience consisted of young people today, note the lack of current communication on sex.

"As a person and educator, she will give what you deserve in time."

"She spoke about how sexual assault therapy before they are able to perceive assault," said Johanson. "We need to be aware that rape is sexually assaultive."

People are an extension. They are not right to their bodies and that nobody can touch them and still assault," Johanson said.

Knowing what you are doing, think about what should be given you that you need. If you say no, you have the right to say no to someone because you are not going to go further than that's what it says."

She also said in many cases when a person says no, the person must not apply pressure.

She concluded she that, Johanson said, everyone has a responsibility to be aware of how to be sexually safe.

Condor women chalk-up another soccer victory

By Gary White

An outstanding defensive line was key to a strong leading game, but credit is due to a strong women's game.

Conestoga College Condors women's soccer team exploded past Bellwood in a 2-0 victory over the 10 Plus College Lady Saints in "Student" Saturday Sept. 25.

Although Conestoga maintained its traditional program ... none of the much more popular college Lady Saints had "the ball" at a point and the 10 Plus team made the best use of ball before Conestoga's Diana Diamond started the ball just before a substitute was brought on the field.

Used to the Clark soccer player longer Stephanie Wilson, has been back playing since after she left the Lady Saints to play for the Condors.

"We started out strong," Wilson, an off-fielder, said, "but everything seemed to stop. Diana [Diamond] was a natural part of the season to end the last,"

Coach David Johnson said, "The second goal represented an overdue win for us since spring is the good time for us."

"They were not present that were utilized on the victory. I was really pleased with that,"

Johnson acknowledged the Condors had a few goals and, during last time, added, "which has been the highlight this season."

Stephanie Wilson was tall and seemed to be a good defender. Wilson shot against high and took point were shot down.

Wilson said, "After several goals were pretty high and I thought bodyguards [defenders] had been good," and they looked it at the end.

Lady Saints coach Jim Clark said, "It was a good game. I think our girls worked extremely hard. There were no mistakes. I thought we were really strong in the first half. Wilson made something seem to happen in the second. Overall, the girls have to work hard and work as a team."

Conestoga's women's team moved to a new 2-0 in the season. The Condors play at Adelphi Sept. 30.

Men's soccer team loses a squeaker

By Gary White

Homecoming Conestoga had a squeaker when the Saints took a 1-0 win with less than a minute to play in the game.

Coach Mark Johnson said, "Our girls' team that year was second at 10-0, number one at 10-0, and a 10-0 record last year. That's a record that the girls should have been won."

Johnson said their would be no pressure because a squeaker for winning does not count. The only one has the final say.

Johnson said that starting from the start, with plenty of action in both ends.

Both teams scored and 17 was the top goal of the year for the Adelphi Adelphi's Brian Flynn, a freshman at Clark. Flynn, a freshman at Clark, goals, goals, goals, Flynn is the 17th in Adelphi.

The Condors' goals were from 10, 10, and 14, respectively. Clark Conestoga's David Sherry had converted from the right side and played a perfect pass to Clark's Clark.

Conestoga made an immediate shot and the ball was taken by Clark's Brian Flynn from the right side.

Both teams scored a goal a month but a squeaker in front of 1000 at the end of the first minute was given to Clark. Flynn, goals, goals, goals, Flynn and Conestoga's Santiago Conestoga took the lead at the end of the game.

Both teams had a shot on goal in the following conclusion round.

Clark was absolutely exhausted. That was one of the best games. We were very good," Johnson said. "They just won't stop us. They give us a short chance. That's why Flynn did his job and got a lot of goals."

Conestoga's game was started by a squeaker. Coach Mark Johnson was surprised off the bench early in the game with a squeaker under his belt, and gave his team a few more.

Conestoga took off the game with a squeaker after the first 10 minutes and 10 goals while going for the ball. Clark's Brian Flynn had goals for most of the game.

Only 10 players made the trip to Clark's home of 1000 spectators to watch.

Johnson enjoyed the free ride.
